Can Assist Life membership for Jackson

A decade-long tenure on the board of Can Assist has come to an end for Guyra's Michael Jackson. He was appointed Director of the cancer charity in August 2014, serving as Vice President from December 2014 until November 2022.

Michael took on the role of President and Chair in November 2022, stepping down last month at the completion of his two year term.

To mark his many years of service to the organisation, Michael was recently presented with Honorary Life Membership of Can Assist by incoming chair Justine Turnbull.

Michael said he was proud to have been involved with Can Assist, which now has the second biggest volunteer base in NSW after the RFS.

These volunteers dedicate countless hours to providing support to patients in need, ensuring that every cent raised directly benefits those undergoing cancer treatment.

During his term he was involved with lobbying politicians and businesses to raise the profile of the organisation. He also highlighted an increase in support available through the Isolated Patients Travel and Accommodation Assistance Scheme (IPTAAS) as one of the achievements during his term.

"It is a great organisation to be involved with and I am proud of the work we have done over the years," Michael said.

"One of the highlights has been getting to meet some incredibly generous people from all around the state who support Can Assist."

On a local level he said the Can Assist continues to support local patients, with the Guyra branch being very active.

He would like to thank everyone who has contributed to the charity, particularly local donors and major sponsors who make the work of Can Assist possible.

"Can Assist's continued success is only made possible through the generosity of our supporters."

"I want to personally thank everyone who has donated, and the many sponsors who help to keep us going."

"The future of this organisation is bright, and I am confident it will continue to make a difference for many more years to come."

A message from NSW Rural Fire Service Commissioner, Rob Rogers AFSM

The NSW Rural Fire Service (RFS), which I have the privilege of leading, is the world's largest volunteer firefighting organisation, with more than 70,000 dedicated members working tirelessly to protect lives and property across the State.

When combined with the expertise of Fire and Rescue NSW, Forestry Corporation, and the NSW National Parks and Wildlife Service, the bush fire management resources available through the NSW Government form a robust and highly capable force.

These resources are a vital line of defence, standing ready to assist communities during their time of need. However, no amount of preparation can substitute for individual and community vigilance.

After several years of wetter-than-average conditions, it is critical that we do not allow complacency to take hold as we continue through the 2024/25 bush fire season.

Every resident should take a moment to assess their personal risk. Ask yourself – am I, or is my property, at risk of bush or grass fires?

The reality is simple – if you live, work or travel near bushland or grasslands, you are in a fire risk area.

The next step is to determine your level of preparedness. Our research indicates that only 70pc of residents in bush fire-prone areas have a plan in place, and of those, only half have actively prepared their homes. This is a concerning statistic.

The RFS strongly encourages all residents to develop a bush fire survival plan. Creating a plan is a straight-forward but crucial step in safeguarding your home, and loved ones. It can take as little as five minutes to start, yet the benefits can be life-saving.

For those who already have a plan, it is equally important to review and update it regularly.

Changes in family circumstances, property conditions, or the presence of pets and livestock can significantly impact your preparedness.

Bush fire safety is not something to 'set and forget.'

Comprehensive resources and step-by-step guidance are available on the RFS website at rfs.nsw.gov.au. I strongly encourage every resident to use these tools to enhance their understanding of bush fire risks and improve their readiness.

Commissioner Rob Rogers has served the NSW Rural Fire Service for 45 years, beginning as a brigade volunteer in 1979.

A holder of the Australian Fire Service Medal (AFSM), he has been Commissioner since July 2020.

This bush fire season, my hope is that all communities across NSW will remain safe and well. However, preparedness is your greatest defence against the unpredictability of bush and grass fires.

Let us work together to protect lives, property, and the communities we hold dear.

We live with bush fire, so we're ready for it. Are you?

PREPARE. ACT. SURVIVE.

Around here, we know to expect bush fires this time of year. Experience tells us that the small, cost-efficient actions we take now to prepare can keep our loved ones and the community safe. Make sure you know the fire danger ratings, make a fire plan and are ready to leave if you need to. Don't wait.

Blue-green algae Red Alert for Malpas Dam

WaterNSW has issued a Red Alert warning for high levels of potentially toxic blue-green algae for Malpas Dam.

The Red Alert warning applies only to untreated water at the identified location and will remain in place until monitoring confirms that the risk is sufficiently diminished. Public access for recreational use at Malpas Dam is not recommended until the Red Alert is lifted.

Those using stock and domestic water upstream and downstream of Malpas Dam should exercise caution, regularly check water supplies for algae, and seek alternate water sources if they suspect algae contamination.

People should avoid recreational activities such as swimming, water skiing, canoeing and any other activity that brings them into contact in water waterbodies until Red Alert warnings are lifted. People should avoid consuming untreated water drawn directly from this waterbody and prevent pets and livestock from drinking this water.

Potentially toxic blue-green algae may cause gastroenteritis if consumed, while contact can cause skin and eye irritations. Consumption of water containing algal toxins may cause liver damage and other health problems. Boiling the water does not remove algal toxins.

People who suspect they have been affected by blue-green algae should seek medical advice. People should not eat mussels or crayfish from red alert warning areas. A precautionary approach to eating fin fish from red alert warning areas is advised. Any fish caught should be cleaned and washed thoroughly in uncontaminated water; the internal organs should not be eaten. Avoiding fishing during a bloom is the best way to minimise risk.

Blue-green algae is naturally occurring and can reproduce quickly in still or slow-flowing water when there is abundant sunlight and sufficient nutrients. If there are concerns regarding treated water supplies, visit the local council or local water utility websites for information about the management of blue-green algae in the treated drinking water.

Updates and information about blue-green algae blooms and red level warning areas can be obtained by visiting the website www.waternsw.com.au/algae.

Endangered Bell's Turtles captured

Northern Tablelands Local Land Services, in partnership with the University of New England, have been hard at work catching adult Bell's Turtle (Wolumbinia belli) females before the start of the breeding season in a significant effort to save the endangered species from fox predation.

Bell's Turtles are only found in the Northern Tablelands of NSW, but the species is facing an immense threat, with foxes eating 90-100% of eggs laid each year. While the cohort of adult Bell's turtles over 50 years old is strong, the number of juvenile turtles in local waterways has been diminishing due to this predation.

Eggs are currently being collected from gravid females captured locally, by inducing the females with oxytocin and incubating the collected eggs in a laboratory at the University of New England. After 2 months, the turtle hatchlings will be released back into local waterways as part of the Northern Tablelands Local Land Services Highland Wetlands project.

Martin Dillon, Senior Land Services Officer at Northern Tablelands Local Land Services said that 2,723 Bell's turtle hatchlings have been released into the environment since 2018.

"We are just now starting to recapture some of the hatchlings we have previously released, which are growing and surviving well. Hatchlings have also previously been tracked using micro-radio transmitters, with some of the hatchlings travelling up to two kilometres in two weeks", he said.

Northern Tablelands Local Land Services staff navigate a river while fencing Bell's Turtle nests.

Northern Tablelands Local Land Services are also tackling the fox predation issue through the use of fox exclusion fences and nest cages under the Strong Culture, Healthy Country project.

Over the next four years, Northern Tablelands Local Land Services will also be working with Aboriginal organisations (Local Aboriginal Land Councils and other associations) that own and manage land featuring Bells' turtle habitat. The team will be working together with these organisations to build fox exclusion fences, control and monitor fox populations, and to find and protect Bell's turtle nests.

"While we will continue to carry out fox management strategies in the Northern Tablelands, incubating eggs in a laboratory is an important short-term solution, allowing us to bypass the predation issue and give the population a boost", said Mr Dillon.

Voluntary conservation agreements with landholders for riparian protection and fox control have also been achieved, creating collaboration between farmers, the University of New England, Local Land Services and ecologists. The project is expected to continue for another 4 years.

Rural Market Reports

Weekly Wool Market

November 29th - A first glance at the Northern region indicator this week doesn't paint the real picture within the individual micron categories.

It was a designated Superfine sale in Sydney and the finer the micron, translated to the larger the increase in price. The Crossbred and the Merino carding sector prevented the Northern region indicator being reported higher.

The Southern region played catch up to the North this week resulting in the Eastern market indicator closing at its highest level for the season to date. 31,530 bales were sold nationally with a passed in rate of 5.5%.

Major buyers included Tianyu, Techwool and PJ Morris with the top 4 purchasing an even spread of the Merino fleece offering. With three selling weeks remaining before the year end recess, combined with the dearer market, the number of bales on offer next week has risen to 39,500.

It's not a large offering by any stretch of the imagination however it may just be enough to test the current period of relative stability.
